

Questions For Your Next Veterinary Visit

Because of the many potential causes of GI upset, a visit to your veterinarian is usually the best course of action. Be prepared to answer the following questions, and ask if a probiotic like FortiFlora might help.

Has your pet experienced any of the following symptoms in the past ten days?

- | | | |
|-----------------------------------|---|---|
| <input type="checkbox"/> Diarrhea | <input type="checkbox"/> Soft stools | <input type="checkbox"/> Vomiting |
| <input type="checkbox"/> Lethargy | <input type="checkbox"/> Blood in stool | <input type="checkbox"/> Increased flatulence (gas) |

Have you noticed that your pet is less active?

- Yes, my pet is very lethargic
- Yes, my pet seems less active than normal
- I am not sure
- No, I have not noticed a change in activity level

Has your pet eaten anything atypical? Please list. (eaten from the trash bin, yard, plants, etc.)

Is your pet currently on any medications or antibiotics? Please list.

Have you changed your pet's diet over the past 30 days? Does your pet eat table scraps or human food? Please list any new foods or table scraps.

Has your pet's routine or environment changed over the past 30 days? Please elaborate. (travel, boarding at kennel, new family member, house guest, etc.)